LETTER OF MOTIVATION FOR PHD

Dear Sir/Madam,

I currently hold an MS in Electronics and Communications Degree from AA University. I am very much interested in applying for the PhD program at ABC University. After finishing this program, I am planning to continue on my research in network architectures and protocols. It is my ultimate goal to serve as a faculty member at a pioneering university, working towards investigating the enhancements which can be done in networks in order to make them highly compatible with the modern ones currently existing. I believe that this program can help me in starting my career specializing in modern networking.

I am very excited towards the opportunity of being able to study more about how ATM and MPLS networks work. I believe that both play a vital role in traffic engineering. Since Internet traffic has considerably grown, it has become the primary research domain among telecommunications engineers. I am hoping that soon I can also come up with my own contribution in this field. Also, I believe that my career experience in the field of networking also represents a benefit because I have also learned how to configure and operate various network equipment. For this reason, I became able to integrate myself, working with a team where each of the members can learn from the others without any form of hesitation.

With regard to my extracurricular activities, I also love snowboarding, playing tennis, traveling and skiing. I really appreciate the overall value brought about by ambition, insistence as well as team spirit. With these aspects, I have learned that commitment is highly necessary for the success of an individual, as well as a group in order to achieve success in any given project.

If you need more information, please contact me right away. Thank you so much for your time.

Sincerely yours,
Albert McGowan

Why Use Journaling Prompts for Middle School Students Although you can certainly just give students an assignment to start journaling about their lives, you'll get much better results when you use prompts to help them get started. It can be tough for reluctant writers to know where to begin. Although their daily lives likely include all sorts of sources of inspiration, middle school students may feel overwhelmed or insecure about sharing their deepest thoughts. However, journaling prompts are a fun, low-pressure way for young writers to build confidence. Students can write short stories, share drama and adventure, or reflect on their childhood memories in their writing. As the school year progresses, you'll notice students becoming more comfortable writing—and each student will have the chance to share his or her unique point of view. So get to it and use this awesome list of middle school writing prompts with your writers today. I think you'll be glad you did. Going beyond middle school writing prompts... Take a look and try some of the following activities and journal ideas for middle school students! 5 Fun Writing Ideas to Use This School Year! 1. Share Your Perspective with a Classmate Though students should never be forced to share their personal writing if they would like it to be kept private, sometimes it's fun to try journal writing with the specific intention to share your work. Ask students to pair up with a classmate (or a small group of classmates) and assign them the same journal prompt. Each student should write their own journal entry and then trade with their partner(s) and read one another's work. Your students will be amazed to see the different ways that they interpreted the same initial writing prompt—and they'll see that each person truly does have their own perspective! Bonus list of 10 Shared Middle School Writing Prompts Journal Sharing With a Classmate Writing Ideas Write about something that your partner probably doesn't know about you.
